There is a legend about the coast of Gutierrez, according to which a father and his son once protected the coast from pirates intending to occupy Puntagorda.

On their escape the pirates left behind a kidnapped queen, but tragically this beautiful woman died of a broken heart a few days later. Poignantly, the father and son gave her back to the ocean, and in order to honour her they built a cross upon a rock overlooking the coast - la Cruz de la Reina.

The Camino de Gutierrez (SL LP 62) is a hiking path 3,4km long, traversing the northern coast of our district, visiting the Mirador de la Cruz de la Reina and showing us the steep Gutierrez coast as well as the northwestern coast of La Palma.

This route is an extension of the Camino Mercadillo del Agricultor - Mirador de los Dragos (PR LP 11.1).

On the same level as the Camino de Matos (at km 2,7) we leave the PR LP 11.1 and turn right on to a beaten track that will lead us all the way to the Mirador de la Cruz de la Reina.

During the first kilometre we catch sight of the deep Barranco de Hiscaguán, which separates the two districts of Puntagorda and Garafia.

From here on, the track curves downwards in a zig-zag course along the coast of Puntagorda- through fallow land, untouched nature and the canary pine trees - exposed enough to feel the gusts of the tradewinds.
